WASHINGTON -- The majority of refugees who have recently settled in the United States bave achieved a high degree of self-sufficiency, are using public assistance much less than is commonly believe and do not develop a long-term dependency on welfare, according to a survey by the Church World

"Refugees are doing significantly better than is commonly believed," according to the service's t50-page report. With time and training, they are "clearly adjusting in and succeeding in the United States." One notable fact is that a majority of refugee families now own cars, it said.

Phillip N. Hawkes, director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement of the Department of Health and Human Services, praised the report's general conclusions but disputed its figures on welfare dependency.

"Their report is great," be said. "We can certainly agree with a lot of their results. Certainly over time refugees do find jobs." But Mr. Hawkes said that based on "actual cases handled by county welfare departments," his office finds a higher degree of welfare dependency than the

The administration is proposing to cut refugee assistance funds from the current $600 million to $419 million in the 1985 budget.

Along with other private refugee resettlement agen-cies, the Church World Service is protesting proposed legislation that would "shift the major burden of responsibility to the private sector," according to the service's program director, Dale S. de Haan. The legislation would require voluntary agencies to take full financial and legal responsibility for refugees

The Church World Service survey estimated that sponsors and congregations that belped the agency resettle 14,000 refugees from 1980 through 1983 con-tributed about $133 million in cash, goods, services and time during those years.

Local officials said the survey's findings mirrored their experiences with refugees. "I feel that the population we work with want in work," said Marcia Zvara, chief of family services in Montgomery County, Maryland. Her office placed 318 refugees in full-time jobs and t7 in part-time jobs in 1983. Vicky Joven, director of a refugee service in Arlington, Virginia, a county identified by federal officials as among the most heavily affected by refugees in the country, said the findings "reflect what is really happening to most of the refugees."

For its survey, the Church World Service, which has resettled more than 300,000 refugees since 1946, sent questionnaires to 4,533 refugee families who arrived in the United States between 1980 and the first half of 1983. About 2,190 families, including about 9,000 persons, responded.

Almost three-fourths of the families who arrived three years ago reported having at least one member employed full time. Among those arriving in the first six months of 1983, 44 percent had at least one person in the family employed full time, the survey found.

Responses also indicated that refugees' use of pub-lic assistance declines over time and "there is no "We don't really believe the problem is quite as had evidence of long-term welfare dependency," the report

The Council of State's spokesman on electoral matters said on radio that a resolution by the council on Saturday 10 postpone the preparations indefinitely was no longer in effect. The spokesman, Manuel Eugarrios, gave no reason for the reversal. Sources close to the government said the international community and the Nicaraguan people bad wrongly interpreted Saturday's decision to mean elections would not be held. Mr. Eugarrios said the draft of an electoral law due to be presented to the Council of State Tuesday would now go forward on

The government junta said in a communiqué also read on the radio that the official date for the elections would be announced on Feb. 21 as scheduled.

The Council of State said Saturday it would postpone the electoral process indefinitely until the facts surrounding two air attacks last week against Nicaragua were known. Four soldiers died in the attacks on northwestern Chinandega province and 10 were injured.

Nicaragua said Honduran Air Force jets staged the raids but Honduras denied the claim.

Earlier, Western diplomats in Managua said that Nicaragua's Marxist leadership was still on a path leading to multiparty elections in 1985. But they said that at the same time, Nicaragua boped to force the United States to accept its icant power to opposition groups.

The officials, both U.S. and Latin American diplomats and some experienced Nicaraguan political authorities, asserted that a combination of economic, military and political pressures was pushing the country's nine-man Sandinist military directorate to hold elections next year.

One U.S. diplomat bere said: "The rational thing for them is to make their offer, to loosen up a bit, to have the elections which they expect to win on the assumption that they are strong and the opposition parties are terribly weak and divided, and thus to disarm the United States publicly."

"If they can convince people their concessions are adequate," be added, "that would put the Reagan administration in the position of either acquiescing in their power or having to invade a country to get rid of an elected government."

Jackson Urges Protests To Bring Troops Home

WILLIAMSTOWN, Vermont The Rev. Jesse L. Jackson, a andidate for the Democratic presidential comination, has called for marches and other demonstrations throughout the United States to ise pressure on President Ronald Reagan to withdraw U.S. troops from Lebanon and Hoodu-

"We must begin to have prayer pilgrimages and marches across the country ... until the boys are home from Central America and Lebanon," Mr. Jackson told supporters Sunday at the Williamstown Elementary School here.

En route to his appearance here Mr. Jackson told reporters aboard his chartered campaign plane that "the goal would be to heighten political awareness to the point where the president feels the pressure sufficiently to pull the boys out of Lebanon and Honduras. Resolutions are insufficient to make that

He said that he thought that the esignation Sunday of the cabinet of President Amin Gemayel of Lebanon should hasten the withdrawal of U.S. troops from Lebanon. "With that government ... collapsing, our boys need to come out quicker, because there is oothing standing between them and confrontation," he said.

On Central America, Mr. Jackson said he feared that the presence of U.S. troops in Honduras could lead to an invasion of Nicaragua. One of the two main rebet groups fighting against the Nicaraguan government is based in Honduras and backed by the United States.

Vermont's combinding primary is scheduled for March 6, and the crowds that greeted Mr. Jackson Sunday seemed to indicate an interest in his campaign. More than 350 persons heard him speak at the school here, and later he was greeted by applause from more than 1,000 in Montpelier City Hall.

At both stops, Mr. Jackson was applauded loudly as he played to he concerns of many Vermont activists: the environment, nuclear weapoos, peace and women's rights. He drew cheers when he said that under the Reagan administration, life has become "more miserable for more people and more dangerous for everybody."

Community in Collision

French farmers are fighting with the police again, in one of the more interesting folk ing countries, primarily the United States. rituals of the French countryside. It is the traditional way of petitioning the government to raise agricultural subsidies -or, more accurately, to get the European Community to raise them. The rioting is also a reminder of the extent to which the European movement has descended from the level of high political idealism on which it was founded in the 1950s and has turned into a system of intricate subsidy and market protection mechanisms.

The European Coal and Steel Community, founded 32 years ago, has become a cartel in which the community struggles to impose country-by-country production quotas on its quarreling members. Despite large cutbacks over the past decade, Western Europe still produces far more steel than it can use. Because governments cannot bring themselves to close mills faster, producers desperately dump steel abroad, some of it in the United States, increasingly generating trade disputes.

The European Community, in its 27th year, is operating mainly as a huge farm-price sup-port scheme. The supports are set too high, for the usual reasons, and produce large surpluses that are often dumped abroad, further exacering countries, primarily the United States.

It is curious. As the European Community has made Europe richer, that wealth and security seem to have eroded the political purposes on which the Community was founded.

Immediately behind the farmers' riots looms the great decision to be made on Spain's appli-cation to join the European Community. That is worth watching as an important test of the European mood and of the direction in which the market itself will evolve. The idealists, who want to see the Commumity grow toward larger political responsibil-ities, believe that the rich countries have a moral obligation to admit Spain promptly and to use the European Community to support Spain's venture into parliamentary democracy. But France and Italy worry about the impact of cheap Spanish produce and wine that will compete with their own farmers' output. Spain's admission is already well behind schedule. Whether it will happen at all increasingly looks like an open question. It is a classic collision between the European Community's original political aims and the less lofty interests it now chiefly serves.

Bickering Over Arms

Two weeks ago, the United States accused the Soviet Union of violating arms control treaties. Last week, Moscow replied in kind. The charges are less worrisome than the fact of the exchange. Such public acrimony only un-dermines public support for arms control and the private channel long used to resolve complicated technical disputes. The blame for initiating this damaging laundry-list diploma-cy rests with the Reagan administration. The Soviet-American channel for addressing problems that arise from arms control treaties is the Standing Consultative Commission. It resolved all disagreements brought to it during the Nixon, Ford and Carter administrations. But President Reagan refused until recently even to discuss problems arising un-der the SALT-2 treaty, which he had promised to observe hut refused to ratify. The excuse was that this might give the treaty legal force. As a result, a backlog of Soviet and American concerns about compliance has accumulated. And officials and senators who want the pending SALT-2 and Threshold Test Ban treaties rewritten have pressed the administration to allege Soviet violations of every sort of arms agreement.

Too compliantly, the White House has produced a vexing miscellany of charges. The accusation that the Russians supplied "yellow rain" toxins for use in Southeast Asia rests on chemical evidence that the government itself has so far proved unable to confirm. There is more substance in accusations on new Soviet radars and missile tests. Though there is no proof of Soviet cheating or any imminent threat to national security, there is evidence of activity that might lead to treaty violations. The Russians contend that their powerful new radar at Abalakova is for space tracking. But contrary to the Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty, it could also be used for missile defense. Now the Russians voice similar commission exists to examine these suspicions. Its protocol calls for confidential discussions. As the Russians point out, the administration's public charges have hruised that convention. The Russians are not greatly nicative at the best of times, but that fact only emphasizes the American stake in the mission. The more serious the administration's concerns, the more eager it should be to use the commission to resolve them. Quiet discussions of weapons and the problems they raise are probably the most valuable feature of the whole arms control process. Public clamors about violations that might be explained or remedied only damage that process and discourage new agreements. Now that President Reagan urges a more serious effort to negotiate arms control, his administration needs to behave accordingly.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The Budget That Wasn't

The more carefully you look at President Reagan's budget performance, the more peculiar it becomes. He has sent to Congress a budget that neither he nor anyone in his adbudget director acknowledges fundamental in consistencies, and his econoonic adviser assures Congress that it has no relationship to the administration's purposes: "The budget is not what we want to see happen." What do they want? A smaller deficit, they say. How? Here you get suggestions of spend-ing cuts, unspecified. But the budget director, David Stockman, told Fortune Magazine a few weeks ago that there will be no more large spending cuts — and he is certainly right as long as military spending remains untouchable. The budget itself contains no significant spending cuts.

The economic adviser, Martin Feldstein, hints that there will obviously have to be a large tax increase after the November election. But Mr. Feldstein is leaving that job in a few months, and there is no reason to think that he is speaking for the president.

The White House spokesman heatedly says the president reaffirms the figures as printed in the budget. But which figures? Some of them assume the deficit will decline; others say it will not. In fact, the president is refusing to make the basic choice. Mr. Stockman incautiously suggests that the White House is waiting to hear the voice of the people in November. But suppose Mr. Reagan wins, and concludes that the voters want neither spending cuts nor tax increases. What then? The nistration grins and shrugs.

Mr. Reagan says that he wants Congress to negotiate with him. His secretary of the Treasury, always a reliable indicator of political currents at the White House, chides the Democrats for not responding immediately. But what are they to negotiate on? A budget that the administration has already disavowed?

Mr. Reagan is not doing a president's job. Under American law and custom, the initiaministration seems willing to support. His tive comes from the president. The American vernment does not work well when the president refuses to lead.

Mr. Reagan has given to one in Congress much reason to believe that he is ready to negotiate in good faith. If he were really looking for a way to begin reducing the deficit and wanted a congressional proposal, be could seize the combination of spending cuts and tax increases drafted by Senator Robert Dole, who has shown more courage and candor on the hudget than all the administration's various quarreling factions put together.

Several times over the past year, the Republican senator from Kansas has called for just such negotiations between White House officials and congressional leaders; the White House has not yet responded.

Given that experience, it is hardly unreasonable for Democrats to fear that negotiations now would be merely a trap. They assume that if they were to make any scrious proposal, Mr. Reagan would spring up from the table and bound around the country hrandishing it as evidence that the Democrats want to raise taxes and weaken the national defense.

But perhaps Mr. Reagan has had a true change of heart since Senator Dole's last unanswered invitation. Perhaps he really does want uine negotiations now with Congress. If that is the case, those negotiations will have to start with a presidential proposal and a presidential position. Mr. Reagan will have to come up with a presidential budget that he is prepared to stand behind. On the central issue of American domestic policy, he will have to start behaving like a president.

Reagan and the Military: A Love-Hurt Relation

C AMBRIDGE, Massachusetts — It is well accepted in politics and public life that, with a certain kind of friend, one is not greatly in need of enemies. Everyone who observes the relationship between the Reagan administration and the military establishment should surely agree.

The administration is strongly in support of the armed services. But I would contend that no administration since 1815 has been more comprehensively damaging to the military's reputation.

There is, first, the matter of the budget. In the years following World War II, with the Great Depression still strong in the national memory, military expenditure was seen as a benign, even useful stimulus to private spending, investment and employment and thus to economic performance in general.

These outlays emerged as a some-what unsettling factor in the Vietnam War — a cause of inflation and of the need for a tax increase. Now, under the Reagan administration, there has been a further major step. Military spending has become the principal and the most highly visible cause of the present and prospective budget deficits. And, a more compelling matter, this spending has been pre-sented by the administration as a basic reason for curtailed or reduced spending on behalf of the poor.

Next has been the effect of more bad wars on military prestige and reputation. The armed services came out of World War II with their pres-tige at the highest possible level. From Vietnam they emerged with a deeply diminished position. The difference was that World War II was perceived as a necessary war; the milunanimous sense of national purpose. In Vietnam, the nation's commitment was to a distant and different culture, in support of a corrupt, unpopular government.

Now in Nicaragua and Honduras and Lebanon the Reagan administration is again engaged in operations superbly designed to repeat the error and deepen the damage to the reputation of the armed forces.

Dissidence and revolt in Central America are rooted in appalling inequities in the distribution of land. wealth, ethnic privilege and political power and a resulting sense of injus-tice that has far more to justify it than that which produced America's own revolt 200 years ago.

The military forces the United States supports and guides in El Salvador have a taste for battle that is even more exiguous than was that of the South Vietnamese. Unable or unwilling to recognize real causes, the administration falls back on its own forces — the wrong cure for the wrong problem. The problem is not different in ebanon, where a handful of marines are expected to subdue religious and communal conflicts that began with the First Crusade. The reputation of By John Kenneth Galbraith ers has suffered there from a military commitment to a wrong war. Next there has been the impairment, even collapse of civilian control in and over the Pentagon.

The Reagan administration has abandoned any effort at such control by according major anthority in the Defense Department and over the armed services to executives from the weapons firms or their lobbyists. This is not civilian control but rather incestuous administration of the military-industrial complex by the military-industrial complex. It is the services again that suffer; no one can accord them their much-valued reputation for disinterested patriotism and public service if they are seen as the agency of and the condmit for revenues to the great weapons firms

-firms that from this largesse have been showing record gains in profits. Finally there is the nature and effect of modern weaponry. Anciently, the soldier with his weapons has been seen as a source of the citizen's security — of protection against invasion, rapine and pillage from beyond the borders. No longer. All reference to modern weaponry has a connotation the Marine Corps and its command-of destruction not only for the enemy but for the critzen and, increasingly, for all life on the planet. Modern weapoury has made the military seem not a protector of life but the custodian of horror and death. And increasingly it is seen as horror without even a military purpose.

None of this truly awesome development seems to have affected the thought and expression of the admin-istration. Instead, there has been the unrelenting commitment to new weapons and weapons systems and to the deployment of those now becoming available. All of this has had a well-advertised priority over the pursuit of effective arms control. This has stimulated an unprecedented wave of concern over the effects of nuclear weapons and war,

To the policy has been added the rectoric. From high civilian officials in these last years we have had a flow of statements on the possibility and acceptability of limited nuclear war, on the possibility of protracted nuclear war and on prevailing in a nuclear war, and the emergence of civilian defense proposals and plans that bear closely and vividly on the insane.

It would be hard to imagine anything better calculated to associate the military establishment with the nuclear horror. It is hardly surprising that a very considerable number of high officers — Admirals Gene R. La Rocque, John Marshall Lee, Noel Gayler and not least Hyman G. Rickover - have emerged from their years of service to express themselves strongly on the need for effective arms control.

The lines of remedial action are obvious: a military budget that respects civilian needs; a total curb on unneeded or irrelevant military operations abroad; control of the Pentagon by civilians who actually control, who are wholly divorced from corporate interest; strong affirmation of the principle of no first use; acceptance of the bilateral freeze as a first step toward arms control; arms control viewed as something to be achieved and not as a political gesture. Only then will the military services again be seen as the instruments of a nation's protection, not of its — and the world's — destruction.

The writer, professor of economics emeritus at Harvard University, is author, most recently, of "The Anatomy of Power." He contributed this comment to The New York Times.

In War, a Nation 'Short of Breath'

WASHINGTON - As one of the last acts of his life, Martin Herz, a diplomat, teacher and writer who died last year of cancer, gave a support, while the Viet Cong were series of four lectures at Georgetown increasingly dependent on forced in-University called "The Vietnam War ductees from the North.

The talks, which have now been published by the university, raised some troubling questions for democracies in general, and for journalists in particular.

Some of Mr. Herz's conclusions: The United States is not capable of waging a protracted war, especially one that is complex and difficult to understand.

He was talking about Vietnam, but his point could as easily be applied to Lebanon. If Mr. Herz was right, then so is Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam of Syria when he says that "the Americans are short of hreath" and will eventually leave Lebanon because it is inconvenient, unpopular and unsuited to quick solutions. The lack of U.S. staying power, Mr. Herz said is partly the result of the shortcomings of the American press, which tends to report wars in terms of good guys vs. bad guys. In Vietnam, the conventional wisdom of American reporters was that the South Vietnamese government was corrupt, repressive and unpopular. But, in retrospect, he said (and be was there) it was clear that the South Vietnamese government was making military progress in fighting the war, and that it was generating popular press never favorably portrayed the South Vietnamese military, although the South Vietnamese soldiers frequently fought well and suffered many casualties. In retrospect, he said, it is clear that the Vict Cong, who were por-trayed as gallant little natives in hlack pajamas, were North Vietnamese draftees, sent to the South in about the same way they are now sent to fight and die in Cambodia. But, Mr. Herz said, the American press — and particularly television, with its enormous political impact has a built-in hias for reporting news that is bad for the home team. He recalled the example of a wire service pool reporter in World War II, covering the Allied landings in North Africa. The reporter sent back a report that described (accurately) ships running aground on landing barriers and Allied ships shelling their own troops.

Mr. Herz recalled one line from the report: "It was like a giant train wreck." But, he said, the reporter missed the central point that the Al-lied landing succeeded in its goal of putting ashore 5,000 men with a minimum of casualties. So it was, he said, in Vietnam, and so it will be with future military operations. The lasting impressions of the Vietnam War are photographic: South Vietnamese soldiers changing mists took over all of Vietnam. They desperately to helicopter skids, a were able to use the former U.S. na-Vietnamese general summarily exestreets of Saigon, bodies laid out in the U.S. Embassy compound after the 1968 Tet offensive.:

Mr. Herz said these vivid impressions — which had immense political impact in the United States — obsoured some larger truths: The South Vietnamese troops generally fought well and they were improving toward the end of the war; the Vict Cong, which was essentially a front organization for the Hanoi government, had a brutal but unpublicized policy of executing local government offi-cials; the Tet offensive was a military disaster for the Communist forces t decimated the Viet Cong and forced the North Vietnamese to take over the fighting in the South.

Mr. Herz offered no solutions to the problems he posed. But he thought the lack of American ability to back up its worldwide commit-ments would lead to more Vietnams. "All I can do," he concluded, "is point out to you that what happened in Vietnam has had repercussions almost everywhere because it affected what we think we can and cannot do, just as it affected what others think they can do with impunity. This is not a good situation and it cannot last." United Press International alyzing loss of energy.

Another Soviet goal is to intimidate China, which is striving to improve its strategic ties with the United States. An aim of the Russians is to demonstrate to the Chinese that the Americans Tack the means and the Americans lack their building and are thus undependable.

Among their other purposes, the Russians are seeking to rattle such Southeast Asian nations as Thailand and Indonesia in order to discourage them from edging too close to China and the United States. All this has been Soviet policy since the late 1960s, when the Kremlin leaders first began to send war-ships into the Indian Ocean. The United States responded by estab-lishing a naval installation on the tiny island of Diego Garcia and shoring up Iran as a surrogate.

How freely the Soviet fleet can roam the Pacific and Indian Oceans is the subject of some debate among strategic specialists. Some claim that its flexibility is limited because its two principal home bases, Petropav-losk and Vladisvostok, are ice-bound for six months of the year. Other experts argue that there is little prospect of a drastic change in Japanese attitudes toward the United States. That alliance, they assert, is in no real jeopardy despite manacel shifts in Japan's domestic politics. A tricky area for the United States, however, is the Philippines — the site of two U.S. bases — where the au-

The Iranian Revolution: A Fixation With Death

UN Aid to Palestinians In his letter "The Palestinians in Lebanon" (IHT, Feb. 1). Charles Kupchan hopes for a permanent set-tlement and durable solution to the question of the Palestinian refuges living in Lebanon. This is a sea that all could support, especially the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, which provides assistance to Palestinian refugees living in Lebanon and four other areas. In Lebanon there are 240,000 Palestinian refugers registered with the agency.

Unfortunately Mr. Kupchest has some of his facts wrong. UNRWA's total budget for relief this year is $23 million. Only a portion of this will go to Lebanon. Over 60 percent of the agency's budget ($233 million in 1984) goes to operating 653 schools. the remainder goes to health care There has been an emergency relief operation in Lebanon since has 1982 that will be phased out next month; UNRWA does not spend $20 million a year on relief in Lebanon.

Mr. Kupchan also says, that UNRWA has discouraged integra-tion of Palestinian refugees into the countries where they live. UNRWA is not in a position to either encounage or discourage integration. The agency has a UN mandate to provide its relief services to eligible relugionation the L9 million registered religionation for the gees living in Lebanon, fordan, provide and the West Bank and Gazz. That is the sole purpose of UNRWA.

1909: Stage Star's Hair Catches Fire NEW YORK - During the first act of "Lady Frederick" at the Hudson Theatre [on Jan. 26] and in view of the audience Miss Ethel Barrymore's hair caught fire from a match spark. With presence of mind the actress saved her splendid locks from going up in smoke by coolly clapping a handkerchief over the fire. A part of the scene is for Mr. Bruce McRae, Miss Barrymore's leading man, to hand the star a cigarette, which she lights from a match held in his hand. When Mr. McRae struck the match a spark flew off and alighted in Miss Barrymore's hair. A theatre fireman issued an order that no more matches were to be used in the scene. Miss Barrymore will have to make some excuse for not lighting her first-act cigarette.

1934: Paris Taxi Strike Continues

PARIS — With only a few taxis furtively accepting fares within the less populous and more residential sections of the city [on Feb. 6], Paris again looked as though the clocks had been turned back 15 years to the days when automobiles were scarce, as the sixth successive day of striking was continued without any sign of a let-up. Policemen had their hands free of traffic tie-ups even in the husiest parts of the city, compensating for the extra work involved in quelling political disturbances last night. The case of the 4,000 striking Russian taxi drivers was brought up before the Paris strike committee, and it was agreed to bring them into permanent union immediately with the French strikers.

LONDON — Iran's second largest city, Isfahan, will be celebrating the fifth anniversary of the Islamic revolution on Saturday by inaugurating what the mayor has described as a "monument more wonderful than Persepolis." The monument is a vast graveyard on the fringe of the desert, with an eventual capacity of a million tombs. So far, however, only one big plot has been put to use, hosting the graves of more than 25,000 "martyrs." Most of the martyrs were young men and boys who died by disposable front men. Ayatollah fighting Iraq or the various guerrilla and tribal rebels opposing the rule of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. Khomeini and the other revolutionary mullahs can claim today that they never said they would establish Isfahan's contribution to the celebrations underlines the revolution's almost obsessive desire to increase the number of its martyrs. It was no accident that Ayatollah Khomeini's first move on his return to Iran in 1979 was to visit a graveyard, where he heralded the age of martyrdom. The more people, especially young ones, who die for our cause, the stronger we shall become," the 85-year-old ruler has said. "Moslems everywhere must conquer the fear of death so that they can conquer the whole world."

This year's anniversary is of much psychological importance for the Islamic leadership. The 7th-century caliphate of Imam Ali, considered to be the only other "just 20vernment" in history, lasted barely four years. Its "legitimate successor," the Khomeini government, has already broken that record. "But is there anything to celebrate?" one member of the Islamic parliament asked recently. His answer to his own question - an emphatic yes — came only after he listed a series of broken promises. Most of those promises, however, were made by the middle-class politicians who, for a time, were used by the revolutionary leadership as easithey never said they would establish democracy or hring prosperity. Such "Western style" demands were raised by the front men, who dreamed of a different revolution. One revolution can easily hide another. And this is what happened in Iran. The intelligentsia, which began the revolt against the shah, wanted more democracy. The mullahs, who turned the revolt into a revolution by bringing in the illiter-ate masses, thought there was too much Western influence and want-ed no more. No "dawn of liberty" was ever promised or demanded. And the Iranian writer Fereydown Hoveyda, in his book "Fendal Nights," says the principal aim of the Moslem clergy was to prevent material progress from leading to a situation in which "man-made law would replace that of Allah."

The revolution was essentially caused by the deep cultural and moral rift that existed between the Iranian masses and their ruling elites. Five years later a rift of a different kind — perhaps more dan-gerous — is dividing the average Iranian from his clerical masters. The shah tried to teach the Iranians how to live but failed because he did not show them how to die. The ayatollah may fail because of his inability to offer life a fair chance.

During the past five years more than a quarter of a million Iranians have died in the war with Iraq or in clashes involving urban guerrillas or tribal rebels. Between 8,000 and 12,000 people have been executed and nearly two million have been forced into exile. An estimated three million people have been made homeless by war. Despite its huge oil revenues, Iran has become poorer every year.

It is unlikely that Iran will experience yet another revolution, a "corrective revolution," any time soon. But the present policy of war abroad and repression at home clearly will not survive the inflexible ayatollah. His designated heir, Aya-tollah Hussein Ali Montazeri, is already trying to mark his distance from these policies. In Islamic terms, the revolution has succeeded. All women are forced to wear veils; alcoholic beverages are outlawed. The "corrupt" performing arts have been all but eliminated. The tribal rule that demands an eye for an eye has become the law of the land. All key positions are filled by the clergy or their relatives.

Today, Iran is the only truly Islamic country in the world," the regime's strongman and speaker of the parliament, Ayatoliah Hashemi Rafsanjani, boasted recently, "Well," asked a Tehran editorial writer, "where do we go from here?" International Herald Tribune.

A comparison of the two volumes did oot suggest a reinterpre-tation of the Soviet past in light of Mr. Andropov's policies. The new history, edited by an alternate Po-litburo member, Boris Ponomarev, who has prepared every edition since 1959, incorporates most of the positions developed by Mr. Andropov during the past 14 mooths. While the recent history is largely illustrated through extensive quotations from Mr. Andropov's speeches and articles, it also accorded unusual promineoce to Koostantio U. Chernenko, a Brezhnev protege and Mr. Andropov's former rival for the post of general secretary of the party. Mr. Chernenko was the only Polithuro member to be singled out in the text, first as a keynote speaker at the June 1983 plenum of the Ceotral Committee and subsequently as one of the architects of the party's ideological line.

Mr. Andropov's speech at the plenum, aloog with Mr. Chernenko's address and the decisions of the Central Committee, were cited as three elements which have "determined the crucial directions and objectives" of the party at the cur-

Nikita S. Khrushchev insisted on strong anti-Stalin assessment, partly to reinforce his own position as Stalin's successor. This view is questioned by some military experts, who believe that, once a Soviet offensive into West Germany began, it would oot be deterred by any NATO strike intr East Germany and Czechoslovakia unless the strike severed Soviet lines of communication. Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - Greed and glory make bad baseball bedfellows. Losing may not be like dying, but getting old definitely is.

Palmer, it has been a winter of doubt. Each feels quartered by athletes to a game beyond their natural time. Still alluring are the money, the cheers, the ribald friendships. And some players simply love the rude challenge — the hard edge of accomplishment — 100 dearly to quit. We have to forgive our legends for doing what we'd probably do in their places.

As players and as men, Rose, eaver, Jacksoo, Morgan and Palmer are as good as baseball has to offer. But these days they're lown and the referee is counting.

IOC Rules NHL Contracts Set Ineligibility

The Associated Press

League is ineligible for the Winter Olympics, meaning that five players from two teams will be disqualified from the Games.

the United States in Tuesday's opening competition, announced that Mark Morrison and Don Die-trich have been declared ineligible because they played in the NHL; the Italians, meanwhile, disquali-fied Jim Corsi and Rich Bragnelo. and the Austrian team dropped Greg Holst.

The state of the s The IOC settled the battle within its ranks over hockey eligibility by deciding that an NHL contract made a player a professional under Olympic rules, endorsing the posi-tion of its eligibility commission.

The second secon "At the meeting of the directorate of the IIHF" — the International Ice Hockey Federation being the sport's governing body - "it was indicated that the recommendation of the eligibility committee was that the only pro league was the NHL and it served to indicate to us that any player in an NHL game was ineligible."

Murray Costello, president of Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, said after the ruling. They did not mention the names of any players. But, yes, they seem to be limiting it to the NHL."

The IOC stated: "The eligibility commission, in agreement with the liHF, states as of today that players are not eligible when they have or have had a contract with the National Hockey League."

The press release distributed by the IOC said the commission's proposal was approved. It was given to reporters a little more than an hour before the rosters were to be submitted for the Olympic hockey tournament.

Four other players whose amateur status was under question after a protest by Finland might well be able to play in the Olympics under the decision. They are Rich Cun-ningham of Austria, Dan Wood of Canada, Thomas Milani of Italy and Björn Skaare of Norway.

The IOC said that each team should check its players and withdraw any found to be incligible. The teams were given four days to replace any players striken from a roster for failing to meet the standards.

New York Times Service SARAJEVO — Against a gray sky above the steep brown hill behind the Olympic Village, a Yugo-slav soldier with a submachine gun walked his post. Down inside the electric wire fence that surrounds the buildings where the athletes of the XIV Winter Games live, Pat LaFontaine glanced up at the soldier who was only a speck on the horizon.

"Something was going on up there," the 18-year-old United States hockey player was saying. "We heard the dogs barking."

SAN FRANCISCO — "Alice in Wonderland" — considered one of the greatest nonsense tales in literature — was, in reality, Queen Victoria's secret autobiography, a group of researchers has concluded after 11 years of study.

"It perhaps will shock many to learn of my duplicity in having hid-den behind Mr. Charles Dodgson and his pen name of 'Lewis Car-Victoria writes in a contrived "confession" of the hoax just published by the Continental Historical Society.

The 241-page study, "Queen Vic-toria's Secret Diaries," meticulous-ly connects each incident in "Al-ice's Adventures in Wouderland" to Victoria's early life,

The Ugly Duchess, for example, is her mother, the Duchess of Kent, whom the princess hated. The White Rabbit is the Duke of Kent, her father. The White Knight in Shining Armor is Prince Albert, the queen's husband.

Queen Victoria is known to have kept extensive diaries throughout her life. Some were published and many were burned after her death.

Under the theory proposed by the society, the queen wanted to "have her cake and eat it." She resented her childhood and wanted to "get it off her chest." But, as she was still reigning, she felt she had to do it secretly, intending that a future age would discover her story.

The oew study alleges that Vic-toria hribed Dodgson by allowing him to receive the royalties from the Alice book and its sequel "Through the Looking Glass," as well as Sir John Tenniel, whose illustrations, the researchers say, are foll of hidden meanings about Victoria's life.

International Herald Tribune D ARIS - Urban Sax, a group of 30-odd

I (some say very odd) saxophones, will close the Musical Instrument Fair at the Frankfurt Fairgrounds at dusk on Wednesday.

The plan is for water to flow down the central staircase of the new gallery while forklift trucks driven by amplified "sound sources" circle around saxophonists, dressed in white jump suits, insectile helmets and silver lurex masks, descending on ropes from overhead trolleys. Camouflaged by smoke, more saxophonists will rise ou elevators out of the central pit, which is to be filled with phony snow.

Gilbert Artman, the creator and leader of Urban Sax, was once a successful interior decorator, but be had visions of decorated exteriors and he combined the arts of music and theater with state-of-the-art electronics into something he calls "acoustical town planning."

A band of saxophones performing around, above and below the audience and out in the neighborhood did oot seem viable or even quite sane when he formed Urban Sax 10 years ago. Artman was then 28 years old. He had never studied music. Last week, he seemed genuinely astonished as he pointed out: "We are now 20 saxophooes, 36 for special occasions."

The occasions have become increasingly special: The Versailles Palace for the Western ecooomie summit in June 1982; the square at Covent Garden to inaugurate the Londoo International Festival of Theatre last August; the Elysée Palace Dec. 24 for President François Mitterrand's Christmas party, and outside and in the Georges Pompidou Center in Paris on New Year's Day 1984 as part of a television extravaganza, "Good Morning, Mr. Orwell," cooceived by Nam June Paik, which was transmitted simultaneously by satellite to France, West Germany and the United States.

Newsweek magazine described Urban Sax's

Newsweek magazine described Urban Sax's Covent Garden spectacle: "Swaddled in white polyethylene suits, they looked like a horde of technicians sent to decontaminate the streets reflected urban life better than any other instruafter an atomic holocaust, But instead of sprays and geiger counters, they wielded saxophooes bility could capture the entire picture."

In the '60s, Gilbert Artman was a hairy hippy. freaking out listening in Terry Riley records — Urban Sax's music is of the minimalist, repetitive variety — and at Sun Ra concerts. He taught himself to play drums ("I tried the saxophone but it was too hard. I decided to get other people to play it.") and worked with jazz-rock groups and French avant-gardists, and with Don Cherry. Urban Sax grew out of a commission to animate the town of Menton in southern France during a classical music festival in 1973; street reverberation." Artman called it.

It grew slowly but with relentless momentum. A business acquaintance describes Artman, with admiration: "He was a very good interior decorator; he decorated my apartment. He was also a surprisingly sensitive drummer, in the Paul Motian school. But mostly he's a boss businessman. Gilbert has done amazingly well operating within the Socialist Party power structure. He knows Mitterrand's wife and uses the familiar 'tu' speaking with [Culture Minister] Jack Lang. When Urban Sax played Grenoble, the mayor came to the airport to meet them. It's a bird, it's a plane — it's Artman!"

"My idea was basically to translate urban sounds into music," Artman said, Artman is a soft-spoken bearded man with an engaging smile, which seems strangely removed from a sense of humor. He was being interviewed in a recording studio, taking a break from mixing music for a film directed by Pierre Clementi, an actor who ooce played tenor with Urban Sax. The group is composed mostly of French musicians and includes some, like Clementi, who do something else for a living.

"My original idea was to create mechanical music, music of the modern world," Artman said. "It was just a notion that the saxophone ment, and only multiplicity combined with mo-

and giant gongs. . . Swinging and swaying like the last big band of Western civilization, they played dissonant anthems, crazy endless riffs, an apocalyptic jive that seemed to mourn the passing of one world and to celebrate the beginning of another."

Opening the Festival de Cinéma Fantastique in the ski resort of Avoriaz, France last month saxophonists followed two plows spraying colored snow. Behind them, a fire truck sprayed a screen of water like a theater curtain. Show scooters buzzing around the periphery and heart like a theater curtain. scooters buzzing around the periphery and hang gliders hovering above were manipulated by people Artman calls "sound carriers," who carry individual amplifiers and speakers blaving pre-recorded electronic drones and loops. Artman has recently expanded his original concept to add percussionists, electronic instruments and a vocal chorus as well as the "sound carriers,"

The music and "town plauning" are created in advance. "The musicians never improvise, although I'll change sequences according to the place and occasion," he said. "Everybody wears earphones, I direct them over an FM transmitter from a central location. What interests me is the creation of a total, continuous enveloping sound environment rather than traditional 'frontal' theater. With a transmitter I can be very precise despite my being say, 200 meters from the musicians, who in turn might be 100 meters from each other."

This elevation of '60s "happenings" to plane-tary proportions resembles the topographical tinkering of the artist "Christo, who has "wrapped" buildings and islands and other large physical objects, so it is not surprising to hear Artman say: "We are going to work with thisto when he wraps the Pont Neuf, He is still waiting for final nermission, but it looks good" waiting for final permission, but it looks good." ment company, Artman is currently working on a large four-belied central saxophone with a number of mouthpieces at the end of pipes or tubes - something like a musical hookah. The person who fingers the instrument will not necessarily blow through it. The air column can be manipulated to allow for only one part or several at once, a sort of long-distance Roland Kirk. Some of the musicians may even be out of sight. One Urban Saxer remarked: "Pretty soon we'll be able to phone it in."

Fed Cuts '84 Money

Targets

By John M. Berry Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - The Federal Reserve said Monday that it wants slower money growth this year than in 1983 to bold down inflation but that it ought to be enough to keep the economy expanding at more than a 4-percent pace. In a report to Congress on monetary policy, the central bank warned that while all signs point to a strong economy in 1984, continuing large federal budget deficits could pose a problem as corporate borrowing needs rise. The deficits are already keeping interest rates higher than they otherwise would be, burting housing and business investment and making resolution of the Third World debt crisis more difficult, the report said.

The Fed also substantially revised its figures for the money supply for 1983 to show faster money growth in the second half of the Normally, a new market depends heavily on exchange floor traders to stimulate activity because outside hedgers and speculators are always fearful of being trapped in illiquid markets. While such markets offer the volatility that speculators enjoy, illiquidity also means slower order execution, often at questionable price gaps.

18 But brokers and exchange officials also did out expect the D-mark to year than was reported earlier. Some monetarist economists had warned that if the very sharp slowdown were not quickly reversed the economy would fall into another recession this year.

"At present, the prospects for extending the economie gains of the past year into 1984 appear, by and large, to be good," the report

Inflation, as measured by the GNP implicit price deflator, is expected by members of the Fed's policymaking group, the Federal Open Market Committee, to run in the range of 4.5 percent to 5 per-cent, and unemployment to fall to 7.5 percent to 7.75 percent by the fourth quarter.

Specifically, the Fed lowered its target range for growth of the mon-ey measure M-2 to 6 percent to 9 percent from last year's 7-percent to 10-percent range. The target for M-3 was cut by half a percentage point to an identical 6-percent to 9percent range.

The central bank again set a target range for the other money measure, M-1, but said it would continue to give much more weight in its policy to changes in M-2 and M-3. It set an M-1 target range of 4 percent to 8 percent for this year. down from a range of 5 percent to 9 percent for the second half of 1983.

IBM Squeezes Mainframe Makers

By David E. Sanger

New York Times Service NEW YORK - The U.S. computer industry should pass a remarkable milestone this year: For the first time, the value of desktop, personal computers sold in the United States — computers that were unheard of six years ago — will overtake sales of the large "mainframe" machines that first cast America as the leader in computer technology.

To many computer makers, that change is further evidence that an era of computer technology is being swept into history. "Mainframes are dying: I am not even quite sure what the term 'mainframe' means anymore," said Michael L. Dertouzos, di-rector of the laboratory for computer science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which helped to give birth to the mainframe four decades

Mainframes are still used by thousands of big corporations, and they continue to be a very healthy source of profit for International Business Machines Corp., the granddaddy of the industry. But the biggest segment of the mainframe business, the mid-size machines that represent about four out of every five sales, has stopped growing and might soon begin to contract.

The prospect that mainframes are becoming an collectively known as "the BUNCH" (an acronym for Burroughs, Sperry's old Univac division, NCR Corp., Control Data Corp. and Honeywell) to scramble for new niches in the computer industry.

Their search has led them to Japan for some new products. They have been hiring away IBM employees to give them ideas. And they are trying to move into the booming market for small desktop computers linked through complex "office automation" networks that permit the computers to zip information from one to another.

But office systems and desktop, personal computers, or more precisely, microcomputers costing $4,000 and up, are dominated by such new powerhouses as Wang Laboratories and Apple Computer. And in the last two years, the desktop market has also been skillfully exploited by the ubiquitous IBM. As a result, the BUNCH group has shared in only a tiny fraction of the revenue from desktop computer sales, which are mostly to corporations rather than to home users. Those sales are expected to jump to $11.6 billion this year from $7.5 billion

Meanwhile, mainframe sales will ease to $11.4 billion from $11.7 in 1983, with less than $2 billion (Continued on Page 11, Col. 1)

C&W Offers To Buy Rest of Phone Company

By Bob Hagerty and Dinah Lee International Herald Tribune

Cable & Wireless PLC, betting heavily on a stable future for Hong Kong, said Monday that it is offering 3.28 billion Hong Kong dollars ($420 million) for the 62 percent of Hong Kong Telephone Co. it does not already own.
The London-based telecommunications company is offering 46 dollars a share, a premium of just 12 percent over the price at which Hong Kong Telephone shares closed last Wednesday, the last day of trading before the Chinese New Year break. Trading in the shares, suspended Monday. was expected to resume Tuesday.

Analysts in Hong Kong and London described the terms as ungenerous but said C&W probably would be happy with just over 50 percent of Hong Kong Telephone.

Last March, C&W bought 35 percent of the company from Hongkong Land Co., which needed funds badly to reduce its debt. Last Sunday, C&W picked up 3.4 per-cent more of the shares from the Li family, one of whose members, Da-vid K.P. Li, is the director and chief manager of the Bank of East Asia Ltd. and a director of Hong Kong Telephone.

Under Hong Kong regulations, C&W was required to make an offer for the entire company after raising its stake above 35 percent. C&W officials said it was unclear how many shares are owned by the widely scattered Li family. Some Hong Kong sources estimated the figure at 5 percent, but C&W said that Li shares already pledged might have lifted the company's stake over 50 percent.

Hong Kong Telephone asked its merchant bank, Jardine Fleming (Securities) Ltd., to prepare a report on the telephone company's prospects. Until the bank gives its advice, the telephone company said, shareholders should refrain from accepting the offer. A merchant banker in Hong Kong said, "It's the first time an offer of this magnitude has been made in Hong Kong since the inproduction of the new takeover rule in 1981, and the market may oeed a day or two to digest it."

A London stockbroker reported

A London stockhroker reported that Jardine Fleming was contendclosing unchanged at 17 in trading ing privately that the offer price on a when-issued basis. More than 2.5 million shares changed hands.

stock market seemed edgy about the prospect of C&W's raising its exposure to Hong Kong even fur-ther. C&W shares slipped 13 pence on Monday to close at 315 pence.

C&W's main business is providing phone service in Third World countries, many of them former parts of the British Empire. In Hong Kong, the company provides the international phone and telex links. Hong Kong Telephone operates the domestie network, linking up about three million subscribers in the colony.

Both companies are highly profitable. For 1983, analysts expect Hong Kong Telephone to report after-tax profit of about 365 million dollars, up 20 percent from a year earlier.

A majority stake would allow C&W to protect its buge invest-ment in Hong Kong, analysts said. Gone, for instance, would be the squabbles over how to divide revenue from international calls between the two companies. Another attraction, said David Gibbons, an analyst at the London brokerage of James Capel & Co., is that Hong Kong is likely to be the hub for a growing flow of communications to and from China.

Even so, despite recent progress in talks between Britain and China, many investors remain nervous about the future of Hong Kong. Britain's lease on most of the colony ends in 1997, and China has stated its determination to regain

C&W's finance director, Ernest Potter, said in London that the new investment in Hong Kong should pay for itself before 1997 but that the company is unworried about the colony's long-term health.

Nonetheless, C&W has been spreading its bets in recent years, concentrating on investments in telecommunications networks in Britain and the United States as well as China.

The company is building a microwave-telecom network in the southern Chioese province of Guangdong and is helping to provide communication services for oil exploration in the South China Sea. Last year it set up a joint venture with the Chinese government to provide phone service in Shenzhen. a zone bordering Hong Kong that China is developing in an attempt to attract foreign investment.

Volcker Urges Lower Deficits On Hydroelectric Development Project

WASHINGTON - Paul A. Volcker, the Federal Reserve Board chairman, adding his voice to the growing debate on President Ronald Reagan's 1985 budget, charged Monday that high deficits are restraining the U.S. economie recovery.

"Pressures from the deficit work to restrain expansion in areas of the economy that are more sensitive to interest rates, such as housing autos and long-term business spending," Mr. Volcker told Congress.

The deficits, predicted at about $180 billion a year for the next three years, keep interest rates high and the dollar strong, burting the U.S. export indus-tries, Mr. Volcker said.

He said that cutting the deficit by only $50 billion to $100 billion would begin to bring down interest rates.

LUXEMBOURG — The European Investment Bank said Monday that it has lent 66.3 million European currency units ($53.7 million) to help improve the trans-Yugoslav railway; which links Greece with the rest of the European Community.

The bank, the EC's long-term financing institution, said the funds have been made available for 20 years at an annual rate of interest of 10.75 percent. It said the money has been lent to the railway authorities of the Yugoslav republics of Slovenia, Croatia, Serbia and Macedonia and to the autonomous province of Vojvodina.

Skovenia, Croatia, Serbia and Macedonia and to the autonomous province of Vojvodina.

The overall costs of the project total $152.6 million ECU ($123.6 million), the EIB said. It added that the improvements, to be completed by 1986, will help eliminate bottlenecks and raise the load capacity of the rail link.

"Traffic over the line has been increasing steadily for a number of years, with freight movements of approximately 10 million tons per year accounting for almost 50 percent of this flow of traffic," the EIB said. Dorchester Tenders for Its Shares In Effort to Thwart Damson Bid

NEW YORK (NYT) — Dorchester Gas Corp., trying to thwart a takeover attempt by Damson Oil Co., made a tender offer Monday to buy at least five million shares from its shareholders at $24 each. Dorchester said the offer would be effective only if Damson Oil managed to huy "50.3 percent of Dorchester's common, pursuant to Damson's tender offer."

Last month, Damson said it would seek to buy 50.3 percent of Dorchester's 18.5 million shares outstanding at $24 each, which would involve an outlay of $209.8 million in cash and Damson stock. The offer interpreted a legerated by the Dorchester's management.

Allied's 1983 Earnings Fell 68%

MORRIS TOWNSHIP, New Jersey (UPI) — Allied Corp.'s 1983 net income fell almost 68 percent to $98 million, or 13 cents a share, and the company has decided to sell its money-losing Bendix machine tool business, Allied said Monday. The company's 1982 net income was $301

Allied said it was taking a charge against net income of $188 million for losses on disposition of the machine tool business, plus a net income charge of $148 million for the sale of its liquid fertilizer business.

Allied said it would split its common stock three for two in the second warter and increase the quarterly dividend 12.5 percent to 45 cents a share on the post-split shares.

PARIS (Reuters) — A cold winter has eased pressure on oil producers to cut production, according to International Energy Agency officials, commenting on the agency's monthly oil market report.

They said pressure on the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to cut production below its quota of 17.5 million barrels a day had eased slightly because of cold weather, especially in North America.

Last month IEA officials said OPEC might have to cut production to 16 million to 16.5 million barrels a day before the end of the first quarter to hold prices steady.

U.S. Backs Dismissal of Chrysler Suit

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Justice Department told a federal court Monday that it supports a motion to dismiss Chrysler Corp.'s suit against a proposed joint venture between General Motors Corp. and Toyota

Mark T. Sheehan, a spokesman, said the department's antitrust divi-sion requested permission from the U.S. District Court to file a brief Feb. 13 in support of General Motors' motion to dismiss Chrysler's anti-trust suit. Mr. Sheehan said the government would argue that Chrysler lacks the standing, or right, to bring suit.

The question of the venture itself is being considered by the Federal Trade Commission. Under the proposed agreement, the two companies would produce up to 250,000 subcompact cars a year at a GM assembly plant in Fremont, California, using some parts supplied by Toyota.

Union Leader Urges More OECD Spending

nal Herald Tribune

PARIS — A British trade union leader told labor ministers at an Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development meeting in Paris Monday that their govern-ments should adopt more expansionary spending policies to ease

David Basnett, the chairman of the OECD's trade union advisory committee, said expansion in spending was necessary because the economic recovery in Western industrialized countries was "partial, stuttering and unlikely to be self-sustaining."

But most of the ministers, senior government officials and representatives of the OECD's employers' advisory group at the meeting disagreed with his assessment.

"Most of us bere feel that present economic policies are working and that unemployment can be dealt with," said John Selwyn Gummer, Britain's minister of state for employment, chairman of Britain's Conservative Party and head of the British delegation.

Mr. Basnett's advisory committee represents non-Communist trade unions in North America, Western Europe and Japan, roughly 60 million workers. He also is general secretary of Britain's General Municipal, Boilermakers and Allied Trade Union, which has about 800,000 members.

Emphasizing that "the trade unions want a constructive result from this conference," Mr. Basnett said that "without governmental and intergovernmental action to sustain it, the supposed recovery will remain a crucial illusion." He specifically urged the OECD to encourage governments to expand spending on housing, transportation, health services, education, communications and leisure

"I do not accept the prevailing OECD analysis as it stands," he said, adding that the recovery "insofar as it exists depends to a large extent on the government of the United States maintaining a massive delicit in its hudget."

some member countries that gov-ernments should maintain "flexihie" labor-market policies, Mr. Basnett said that the call for wage flexibility was a "code word" for cuts in real wages.

AMSTERDAM — The Dutch electronics company NV Philips said Monday that it agreed on an arrangement for it to take effective control of West Germany's Grundig AG. Analysts said the move, which had been expected since Decemher, should iocrease the strength of the European electronics industry.

The complex transaction, valued at about $200 million, provides for Philips and a consortium of banks led by Dresdner Bank AG to eventually take a majority stake in Grundig which holds a large part of the West German home electronics market.

WASHINGTON—The government will spend $22.5 billion in direct and credit-related subsidies to businesses this fiscal year, and about $70 billion in special tax deductions, according to a Congressional Budget Office study.

Because most of the total $92.5 billion in assistance is in the form of tax deductions or credit pro-OCIETE GENERALE

The other major credit programs run by the federal government are the Export-Import Bank, which assists foreign purchasers of U.S. goods, and the Small Business Administration ministration.

While utilities and agriculture get most of their help through di-rect spending and credit help, the study said, the manufacturing, service and trade sectors get most of their government help through spe-cial provisions in the tax code, such as accelerated depreciation, investment tax credits and fuel depletion

The study gives details of 11 major business tax expenditures totaling more than $70 billion. But Mr. Webre cautioned that because one tax provision might affect the way another was used, it could be inac-

They will save an additional $15.7 billion by being able to take a percentage of their cost of buying new equipment as a credit against taxes owed.

Even though manufacturing and the trade and services industries receive far greater total assistance than the agriculture and utilities industries, farming and utilities "receive the most aid" relative to their size, the study says.

Three programs alone account for 75 percent of the net federal outlays for credit programs: the Commodity Credit Corp., which makes crop loans to farmers; the Rural Electrification Administration, which makes loans to rural electric ntilities; and the Agricul-tural Credit Insurance Fund.

Mr. Webre said the study cov-ered programs that had the primary "intent of promoting commerce and industry." It did not cover other federal programs "that may have other significant industrial effects, but which Congress undertakes for other purposes."

For example, the study said, the Defense Department is expected to spend $140 billion to buy goods and services in fiscal 1984. Medical and housing subsidies, aimed pri-marily at individuals, total $110 billion. All together, Mr. Webre said, the study excluded $300 billion in 14 federal programs that "have significant identifiable commercial effects." The study said that if Congress bring them more directly into the budget-making process. The study suggested that Congress might:

The association said bad weather may have Employment, new orders and production increased in January, but not as fast as in Decementary, but not association, which policy purchasing managers at 250 industrial companies in 41 states every month. Prices and inventories remained "under control," it said.

Because the rate of economic growth slowed.

the purchasing managers composite index dropped sharply, to 61.1 percent, from 70.6 percent in December. In December, the associa-tion's index was at the highest level in more than 10 months:

December's index and those for previous months have been recalculated because of a change in the Department of Commerce's seasonal adjustment factors. Nonetheless, a reading above 50 percent still indicates that the economy is expanding, while a reading below 50 percent indicates that the economy is declining. according to the association.

January's decline in the index was the first since August, when the index was 61.7 percent, as recalculated.

However, Charles T. Haffey, chairman of the association's business survey committee and a vice president of Pfizer Inc., said it was too early to draw conclusions about the direction of the

We want to have one more month and see what happens in February," he said. "There are people on the committee who are saying that the decline was caused by the weather. I suspect we're going to see a better February."

The harsh weather in much of the country last month could have slowed deliveries to and from plants, Mr. Haffey said, although he did ac-knowledge that the weather was probably not he cause of a slowing in new order growth. John J. McDonald, manager of contract purchasing at Ingersoil-Rand Co., which makes compressors, pumps and drilling equipment, said he generally agreed with the conclusions of the January survey.

"On an overall basis, the rate of growth seems to have tapered off a bit," he said in a telephone interview. "But our projections would say that it's not a trend. We're still optimistic. This is just a little valley."

According to the purchasing association, em-ployment improved for the eighth consecutive month. Twenty-four percent of those surveyed said employment increased in January, up from 21 percent from December. However, 14 percent reported lower employment, up from 9 percent the previous month.

Only 39 percent reported higher production n January, down from 44 percent in December; hose reporting lower production increased to new orders, down from 44 percent in December, and 14 percent reported a decrease, up from 10

Price increases were slower in January than December. Aluminum, steel, industrial fuel oil, paper, lime and polyethylene were among the goods that were reported to have increased in price; copper and silver fell. Integrated circuits were reported in short supply.

A positive sign was a slowing of veudor deliveries, which indicates a backlog of orders.

Only 2 percent of those supered in both January

Only 2 percent of those surveyed in both Janubut the number reporting slower deliveries increased to 29 percent, from 24 percent.

THE SHADOW CABINET

By W.T. Tyler. 352 pp. $15.50. Harper & Row, 10 East 53d St., New York, N.Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Michael Kernan

I T seemed like a natural. W. T. Tyler, who in real life is Samuel J. Hamrick, a retired foreign service officer, had written a Washington novel

To anyone who had fallen under the spell of "The Man Who Lost the War," a dark tale of East Berlin worthy of le Carre, and "Rogue's March," about a coup in the Congo, and especially "The Ants of God," a wrenching love story involving an American smuggling guns across the Ethiopian border, this one, set in the first year of the Reagan administration, should be the best of all.

And it has almost everything. One character after another, from a high-living California rough diamond to a Moral Majority cracker congressman, springs to life. A rock is lifted to reveal the whole crawling nether world of Washington, with its dealers and connivers, its social pretenders and high-placed lunatics, its cynics and has-beens and lost souls.

"There's a lot going on these days," someone says. "Take Honduras. A couple of my friends got some big projects down there — real tough, real quiet, too. I'm helping them out, their contact man, you might say. Training packages, a little ordnance. Somoza's brother-inlaw was a buddy of mine. . . . So they've got people who know the Middle East and have the contacts out there, same as Latin America, where they're in solid. It's the legislative side they're trying to huild up, oot the senators so much — the salad boys in the back room, oiling up the cabbage."

Tyler has the scene down to earle perfection: the old hands who spend those endless lunches at the back of the room in certain downtown bars making arcane, crypto-Bogart conversa-tion over martinis, Congressional receptions electric with self-importance, the peculiar foundations operating in broken-down old mansions whose high-ceilinged rooms have been turned into overheated warrens recking of cigarettes and armpits, the pale drones of the Pentagon's windowless bowels, the languishing suburban wives and the ambitious oewcomers who think a house in McLean is all they oeed.

They give you Washington as Babel: the gunk you would find at the bottom of the pot if you boiled down the United States, and perhaps the most memorable is that of Senator Boh Combs of the Moral Minutemen, with wide blue eyes and a "wooden face in which only the small cherub's mouth moved, as pink and wet as B baby's." Tyler traces Combs and his chubby, weasel-wise aide Shy Wooster, back to a South Carolina used car lot, a nasty little world of smalltown real estate finagling, racist bullying and hidden hatreds.

Tyler works like an alchemist: he slowly, deliberately arranges elements, carefully mixes them, and then suddenly, at the end, every-thing begins to fizz. This time they don't quite

The anthor tries to bring his disparate stories together, but they refuse to meld, somehow. Each one retains its own shape, so that the final effect is more like interrelated short stories.

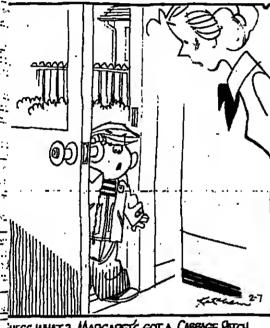

One problem, which may sound niggling, is that there is a huge cast of characters, and nearly all of them have rather unremarkable two-syllable trochaic names: Wilson, Foreman, Crofton, Larson, Murphy, Doulon, Davis, Morris, Matthews, Kramer, Ramsey, Fillmore. Fletcher, Foster, Dillon, Fischer, Gawpin, Wooster, Jackson, Pepper, Rathbone, and more, most of them introdoced in the first 50 pages. They do tend to run together, and the plots are so complex, the dialogue so com-pressed, that one has to keep checking back to remember who they are.

With that said, "The Shadow Cabinet" is still one of the most deadly accurate Washington oovels ever. It has a rollicking profusion that escapes Ward Just's gemlike portraits of the uptight; it rings wickedly true, as all those self-described "thrillers" about disappearing presidents and military takeovers never did. It is also hilarious, a Washington quality that many fail to detect.

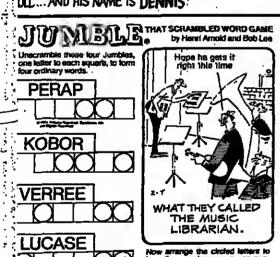

Over the years, the fabled "Washington novel" has proved elusive, and Just himself has said the reason is that readers get distracted trying to identify the characters. "So it can't be directly about the corridors of power," Just said. "It's got to be on the fringes."
You want fringes? You got fringes.

Michael Kernan, author of "The Violet Dots."

Break Dancing Is Breaking Out All Over

By Robert Lindsey New York Times Service

OS ANGELES - Dancing tumbling twirling standing on their heads, "popping" their joints, young people around the nation are doing "the break."

The break, an acrobatic blend of gymnastics, ballet, martial arts and pantomime that originated in the poverty of Harlem and the South Bronx a decade ago, has moved out of the ghetto. From Boston to San Francisco, young people are spending hours a day practicing headstands. handstands and somersaults and performing on sidewalks, in shopping malls, gymnasiums and on public stages.

So many break dancers per-form each weekend in Westwood

Village, a college oeighborhood in Los Angeles, that police have been called to clear the streets of spectators. More than 160 young people were seot bome from Westwood one recent weekend after merchants complained and the police cited them for violating the city's anti-loitering law.

In some suburbs of Chicago, break dancing has become students' favorite entertainment. In Atlanta and Philadelphia, some of the coldest weather on record did not stop teen-agers from dancing in the streets.

"I really think we are seeing a cultural phenomenon," said Bill Castellino, the director of a play to be staged in San Jose that will feature break dancers, "It's bevond a fad, beyond a trend, it's a oew type of athletic activity, a sport almost."

In time, according to some who counsel young people, break dancing may go the way of the jerk, the slam dance, the twist, the bustle, the bunny hop and the jitterbug. But for oow, they say, it has begun to capture the attention of much of teen-age America.

Break dancers do not engage in cooveotional social dancing. They perform for others, generally in teams of a half dozen or so, and usually accompanied by rhythm and blues or rock music blaring from the speakers of an oversized portable radio, The best of the break dancers, while strutting and swaying to the music, awe their audiences with their daring beadstaods and band-

In recent months, break dancing has invaded some of the gies. United States's affluent white suburbs, but it is still an art form heavily dominated by orban blacks and, to a lesser extent, Hispacifying effect, preventing gang wars because it provides an aveoue to release competitive ener-It is also giving some of these young people a new dream: Just as other generations dreamed of success in professional sports or the rock music world, many of today's "breakers" hope their skills will get them a ticket to fame and fortune.

Omar Sonza, 14 years old, performs a variation of break dancing called "popping," in which be entertains sidewalk crowds io Westwood Village by dancing rapidly with jerky motions, as if he were a robot whose motor was running too fast. His dream is that his skills will get him in a television commercial for a soft drink. Other "breakers" say they dream of landing a role in a movie featuring break dancing. In Atlanta, Wayne Oliver, a wiry 20-year-old koowo as "Flip," who is widely acknowledged as the city's best break dancer, says he has already made enough money dancing to think of leaving the public bousing project where be lives.

After he won a local dance cootest, a spectator hired him to entertain at a party. "I got $200 for dancing twice, about seven min-utes each," Oliver said.

His repertory includes double somersaults, a "bead walk," in which he slides over the dance floor upside down, and the "dolphin," in which he gives his impression of a flopping, grounded

Other break dancers say they are not looking for money but fun and friendship. "When you get a lot of races like this together, dancing is a universal language," Hal McGrew, 15, a southern Californian, said in Westwood Village on a recent Friday night. "Instead of fighting, they 'break."

Break dancing so far has been almost exclusively a male pastime, although in a few cities teenage girls have begun to take it up. Jerome Ponker, 22, a flashy athletic dancer who moved to Los Angeles from New York several months ago, said: "It's like a nat-ural high. I feel a lot of frustrated energy in my life right now. I'm unemployed, living in the streets since I came from New York. When I'm dancing, I'm releasing my frustrations in a positive way. It's a spiritual experience for me."

The success of the movie "Flashdance," which has a brief sequence on break dancing, and the skills of Michael Jackson, the singer and dancer, are said by social workers to have helped spread the popularity of break dancing beyond New York, which by all accounts remains the Par-nenon of break dancing.

Break dancers interviewed in nine other cities agreed that a break dancer could not be called a star in the movement until be had cooquered New York City.

On weekends, many of New York's best such dancers perform at two clubs, the Fun House on West 26th Street and the Roxy on West 18th Street. If the weather is fair, "breakers" also perform in the Broadway theater district, outside Pennsylvania Station, at Washingtoo Square Park in Greeowich Village, and else-

Sunday Express described it as "embarrassingly slipshod," although Anthony Curus in the Financapertedness economy and said unexpectedness, economy and sustained tension." The novelist Anthony Burgess wrote in the Observier that "when a piece of fiction is banal," critics need to take a second and even a third look if its author is "universally honored," to see if the "banality is a code or a new mode of profundity or elegance we are too stupid to per-ceive." But Burgess concluded that he could find nothing like that in "The Paper Men." Golding, 71, was the first British novelist to win the Nobel prize since John Gals-worthy in 1932. The Swedish writer Artur Lundkvist, a member of the Swedish Academy, which elected the laureate, said then that Golding was of "no importance whatsoever" internationally.

The author James Michener was recently named to the Board of International Broadcasting, which oversees Radio Free Europe which has cost him the opportunity of having his book "Poland" trans-lated into Polish. Two of his other works, "Centennial" and "Space," will not be published in Poland either. "Poland" traces the fortunes of three families through nearly 800 years of Polish history.

The chess grandmaster Victor Korchmoi said Sanday that a Swiss court has ordered him to pay 63,400 Swiss francs (about $28,700) to his wife, Bella, and son, Igor, 25, who joined him in exile in Switzerland in May 1982. Korchnoi said his son had sued for money for a university education and for compensation for the 21/2 years he spent in a labor camp for refusing to serve in the Red Army. According to Korchnoi's manager, Petra Lecuwerik, the grandmaster also had marital troubles culminating last year when he filed for divorce from his wife. They have lived separate lives since she and their son were allowed to leave the Soviet

HAVE YOU BEEN MISLED

BY THE "OIL GLUT"?

In the last 12 months a composite of a company share prices traded on the Landon Stock Exchange show on over-age increase of:

On the New York Stock Exchange, Soon is up 37 per cent, Shell 60 per cent, Gulf 82 per cent, Getty 135 per cent and Oppdental 56 per cent, to name but a few.

Don't be blinded by the headings, the oil sector is hardly dead, and indica-tions for the rest 12 months promise even greater increases.

Our securities portfolio managers have over $1.5 billion under management, so don't be missed. A minimum investment of $5000 in our diversified energy fund administered and under the australiant or one of the world's foremast financial institutions. Can lead to substantial profit.
